What's new:

Rain poured down on The Dream Kingdom of Tascaria as the day approached and it was approaching rapidly, Tarethina and her party, along with Lord Dace, was nowhere to be seen, naturally, but that didn't lessen the excitement that filled the Castle. Everyone was relaxing, enjoying the fact that they were about to have a good time and they were. After all, a normal day turned into chaos, with limited information and no way of contacting the party. Everyone was ready for that joyous day. Then, it happened. The Storm. The worst storm that Tascaria had ever seen in it's history. It was full fury in the air, ready to drop down to serve the party as it ripped through the land of Tascaria, bringing storms that were expected hours earlier, now. It brought the shocker to The Dream Kingdom, an earthquake. This earthquake just might have been the end of it all, if there was one thing that Tarethina feared it would be that. She feared that if it did happen, the Dragon God, Taithamus, would leave, never to return. Knowing that there was one Dragon God with a kind heart, a man who smiled and fought for the little people, she feared that this could all be the end of the several hundred years of lovely days that the people of Tascaria had. ((I'm going to try and make this as much of a character study as possible)) After the Earth shook, The party followed the instructions to the letter, Tarethina only made sure that it was clear and that no one was to be left behind. Safely, her party made their way into the castle to be using its built-in-stability to wait until the storm blew over. After the storm stopped, the party, along with the Castle itself, fell into a state of disrepair. There were less guards, less soldiers, not even mopping the floors. For the sake of being safe, it gave the party a great opportunity for discussions, debates, just about anything. It was almost as if the guard was unconscious of what was really going on. It was sad but funny to sit around and talk to people more then they would talk to each other, even friends they had but that's just the way it is, you'll see, this is going to be a touching experience with a very sad outcome. I'll go ahead and start off with Tarethina as she had just finished a discussion with
