What's new:

The Invisible Hours (Originally shown in the U.S. as A Permanent Vacation) is a 1936 American musical comedy-drama film, starring Shirley Temple as the titular character and Mickey Rooney as her wealthy, lecherous uncle. The film was a co-production between RKO Radio Pictures, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (MGM) in 1934, and was directed by Henry Koster. The film was a sequel to MGM's 1932 musical film of the same name, which was also made on RKO, starring Ginger Rogers. Plot Aunt Daphne Dohenridge (played by Lorna, Jean Parker) and Minnie Nicklin (Elizabeth Taylor), the daughter of a very wealthy bank president, are in love with the same wealthy bachelor, wealthy Uncle Lee Weeks (Harry Warner, Charles Winner). A third character, George Nickel (Gig Young) is in love with Minnie Nicklin, but since her father has appointed him to marry Daphne Dohenridge, he is in no position to propose. When Uncle Lee invites them both and Daphne and Minnie's wealthy friend Rinky Dink (Donna Reed) on a trip to the Miramar Gardens resort in California, neither of them wishes to go; he wants to show off and enjoy himself, and she wishes to remain on home turf. They both reluctantly go, to the chagrin of their respective suitors. Over dinner with Uncle Lee one day, Daphne and Minnie break confidences of their plans for when they will marry, and Uncle Lee refuses to give them a lift home when he drops them off after dinner. Uncle Lee drives off, leaving them in the dark, and - out of spite and a desire to show him up - they decide to jump the cliff on which the house is built. We learn that Minnie has secret debts which she cannot afford, and they are in danger of being reported to her father. Rinky Dink, too, has a secret, but by then we find out that they are all in it together, and quit out of solidarity. Rinky Dink and Minnie, with the help of her Uncle Lee, move in with Daphne, and George Nickel moves in with Minnie. Uncle Lee puts them up in a house in Los Angeles, where he forces all three women to work for George. They are allowed to be present during the house parties he arranges, but
